Security and Data Loss Survey Results

Guest Speakers:

Mark Thompson, Ernst & Young – Global Information Security Survey (GISS) – key themes
Matthew Martindale, KPMG – Data Loss Barometer 2009

Ernst & Young's 2009 Global Information Security Survey (GISS) - The key themes

The Ernst & Young GISS, now in its 12th year, it is one of the longest running and most respected surveys of its kind, providing organisations an opportunity to compare themselves with others on important information security issues and gain insights for making key decisions. These results of the 2009 survey will be hot off the presses. In 2008 nearly 1,400 organisations in more than 50 countries and across all major industries participated in the survey.

Mark is a leader within Ernst & Young's Privacy Advisory Services team which specialises in providing privacy related support to Ernst & Young's leading global and domestic clients. He has managed the delivery of a wide range of security reviews across industry sectors.

KPMG's Data Loss Barometer 2009

The KPMG "Data Loss Barometer 2009" looks at how data can go missing, and consider what organisations can do to keep information secure – or minimise the harm should the worst happen. The publication unveils the latest KPMG worldwide research into reported data loss incidents, at a time when the credit crunch is causing a rise in intellectual property theft.

Matthew has worked for KPMG for the past eight years and has been principally involved in information security advisory and assurance engagements. He is the Certification and Assurance service line leader for the UK and has responsibility for all clients and services relating to ISO 27001, ISO 20000, BS 25999, Webtrust and other PKI schemes. Matthew led the research and production of the latest Data Loss Barometer.
